ABOUT A DEGREE IN HUMAN RELATIONS

Human Relations degrees prepare graduates for careers focusing on social change and the resolution of human relations problems. Students may plan studies which focus on such areas as counseling, women’s studies, race relations, and organizational studies.

Human Relations (HR) is a multi-disciplinary field of study and professional practice that combines theoretical perspectives from the social sciences and humanities, including organizational studies, the world of work and service, and multicultural studies.

RELATED SKILLS

Plan long-term projects
Write clearly and accurately
Cross-cultural understanding
Team building skills
Gather information and data
Sample, survey, and interview
Understand group dynamics
Evaluate and examine data
Summarize results clearly
Able to organize ideas logically
Utilize statistical applications
Assess people’s needs
Conduct field studies

HIRING INSTITUTIONS

Adoption and Childcare
Advertising Departments
Business Corporations
Churches
Colleges and Schools
Community Organizations
Correctional Institutions
Court Systems
Educational Periodicals
Education Department
Labor Unions

Labor Department
Housing and Urban Development
Peace Corps
Labor Relations Board
Hospitals
International Aide Organizations
Veteran’s Administration
Market Research Firms
Personnel Departments
Government Agencies
Education Institutions
Civil Rights Commission