INTERNATIONAL STUDIES INTERNSHIP
Enrollment and Requirements

The Department of International and Area Studies recognizes that an internship experience can make a very valuable contribution to a student’s educational development, and strongly recommends that students take advantage of these opportunities when they become available. Internships are often valuable simply for the experience they provide. However, under certain conditions it is possible to earn academic credit for an internship. The award of academic credit for an internship requires an element of reflection, research, and writing about the work you undertake. This academic component can strongly enhance what you gain from the opportunity and improve your ability to articulate knowledgeably the requirements, benefits and lessons of work in the public or non-profit sector.

Students may enroll for IAS 3910, International Studies Internship, for up to three hours of academic credit in a semester. The maximum credit allowed for internships is six hours.

- Only undergraduate students with a minimum 2.75 overall GPA, and with forty-five completed credit hours, are eligible for internship credit in IAS 3910.

- The Department of International and Area Studies will accept responsibility for supervising interns only when the internship is part of a coherent educational plan.

- Internship credit will not be granted retroactively.

- IAS 3910 is graded Satisfactory or Unsatisfactory.

- IAS 3910 may be taken for either two credits or three credits. One-credit enrollments are not available.

- For two credit enrollments, it is expected that a student will perform about 100 hours of work in the internship and complete about ten pages of writing related to the internship. For three credit hours, the expectation is about 150 hours of work and about 15 pages of writing.

- Internships must be supervised by a member of the faculty. The faculty member can be someone you know and have worked with in a previous class, or someone whose area of expertise fits with the work you will be doing in the internship.

If you have identified an internship opportunity and want to consider obtaining academic credit, follow these steps in order to enroll in IAS 3910:

1. Obtain from Katie Watkins, academic advisor, this internship statement of internship requirements and the application form.

2. Discuss the proposed internship with the faculty member you have chosen to supervise your internship course.

3. Complete the application form and obtain the special permission required for enrollment in IAS 3910.
4. Verify that your chosen internship is applicable to your degree plan by discussing your proposal with Katie Watkins, academic advisor. For example, to satisfy the International Security Studies practicum requirement, students will need to select an internship with an organization that works in international security. Examples of internships that will meet the requirement include governmental organizations, select nongovernmental organizations focused on an international security issue and private sector companies that work to alleviate security issues internationally. Students must have their internships approved to verify they will fulfill the requirements of the major.

5. If the internship is to be completed abroad, students must register with the Education Abroad office and obtain the proper insurance.

6. Make arrangements to have the supervisor for whom you will work in the internship itself fill out the form indicating agreement to your work. When the supervisor’s statement of agreement is complete, it should be mailed to your faculty supervisor.

7. Discuss with your faculty supervisor the academic component of your work. You should expect to complete a writing and reading assignment, which may include the following:

   A report at the end of the internship about what you did and what you think about your experience; plus a research element relating your own experiences to what has been written by scholars about the area of public life in which you were involved.

8. Complete CIS Internship Survey via SurveyMonkey no more than one month after the internship is completed.

INTERNATIONAL STUDIES INTERNSHIP

To: Supervisors of University of Oklahoma interns:

The Department of International and Area Studies (IAS) at the University of Oklahoma recognizes that an internship experience can make a valuable contribution to a student’s educational development, and strongly recommends that students take advantage of such opportunities when they become available. Internships are often valuable simply for the experience they provide. However, under certain conditions it is possible for students to earn academic credit for an internship. The award of academic credit for an internship requires that students seek prior approval for the internship from the IAS, complete the internship assignment satisfactorily, and compile a portfolio about their experiences. The portfolio will include a statement of agreement from the supervisor for whom they intern, plus personal statements about the student’s experience, and a paper reflecting some reading and research about the work performed during the internship. When all elements are completed, the internship enrollment can contribute up to three hours of academic credit towards the student’s international and area studies degree.

Supervisor’s statement of agreement:

Nature and Duration of the Internship: Please describe briefly the type of responsibilities to be assigned, the anticipated work schedule, the beginning and ending dates, and the kind of supervision the student will have. (A minimum of 100 hours is required for two-credit enrollment, 150 hours for three-credit enrollment.)

Note: On completion of the internship, the supervising faculty member may request an evaluation of the student’s performance.

Internship Paper Statement

Students enrolling in IAS 3910 for two credits should complete a writing assignment of about 10 pages, while students enrolling for three credits are expected to write about 15 pages. The specific expectations about this writing should be discussed with the faculty supervisor. In general, however, there are two components expected in the paper that completes an internship.

1. Discussion of the internship experience:

   This should be about 4-5 pages, should be written in the first person, and should describe and analyze your experiences. Give an account that describes what kind of work you did, what kind of people (clerical, managerial/professional, political) or clients you worked with, how your department/agency/office was organized, what sort of policies or programs it implemented, whether you think it was successful in most or all of its operations, what critical observations you have made, and whether you learned anything new or important about how agencies work.

2. Research (about 5-6 pages for two credits, about 10-11 pages for three credit enrollment):

   This component requires that you do some reading and research that is related to your internship field, and write a paper putting what you did into a larger context so that you can tie it to what we know about the major issues and operations of international relations today. Do not hesitate to ask your supervising faculty member for advice.

   The goal of this paper is for the student to indicate that his or her internship experience is combined with an awareness of current thinking about what you have been doing. Write the paper as if you are giving a report on what is known about your area of activity and what the major literature is that is relevant to understanding that work. You will try to establish a big-picture framework for your work, putting it into context and explaining how it fits with similar or related things that we know about the operations of international politics today.

3. You should discuss strategies with your supervising faculty member for developing your research paper.

4. Your paper should be well-written and appropriately documented. Use the standard research documentation styles described in Turabian’s manual (available at bookstores everywhere) or some other recognized guide to formatting research and scholarship.

5. Your paper will be the last piece in the folder documenting your internship experience.

6. The department will retain a copy of the entire folder. You should also retain a copy.
