4013 Capstone in International and Area Studies

Sec. 002 War & Conflict from Ancient Time to Present Day, Dr. John Fishel As a Capstone, this course represents a mutual exploration of the subject matter of International Relations – what many scholars have called “High Politics” – in its most violent form over the last 2500 years. During the course, we will read and discuss many of the classics of history, IR, even literature, and theory of warfare. We will also read about warfare and conflict by participants and first hand observers. While most of the readings fall within the Western tradition I have very deliberately included the Chinese classic, Sun Tzu's The Art of War. The reason for this is that Sun Tzu has been a major influence on military and political thinkers of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. That said, the bias of the course is found in the work by Victor Davis Hanson, Carnage and Culture. While I happen to agree with Hanson's approach and most of his conclusions, this does not mean that you are required to do so. Well reasoned disagreement definitely has its rewards in both making for lively discussion and a good grade.

Sec. 003 State Building & State Failure, Dr. Ariel Ahram

The 2002 U.S. National Security Strategy states that "America is now threatened less by conquering states than we are by failing ones." The U.S. has taken on numerous state-building projects, most visibly in Iraq and Afghanistan, but additionally in Somalia, the Balkans, Latin America, and Central Asia. This seminar looks at the theoretical and empirical dimensions of weak and failing states and the efforts to rebuild them. We will try to go beyond policy to look at the larger factors which contribute to state weakness and could constrain the process of state formation.
