This course explores the distinctive ways in which the world’s religions are shaping (and are shaped by) the social, political, and economic dynamics of globalization. It will explore the tensions at play in modernization, secularization, and post colonialism. We will examine the multiple intersections of religion and globalization through a variety of themes and case studies: human rights, development, health, environmental sustainability, conflict and violence, pluralism, political mobilization, and the role of religion in the public sphere.

While global events and affairs are largely driven by political actors vying for influence on the international scene, they also have an undeniable ethical dimension. From global terrorism, arms control, genocide, humanitarian intervention, global trade, and the global environment, ethical questions abound in the study of global politics. This course seeks to investigate the relationship between ethics and global politics. The focus of the class will be on the role that moral considerations play in determining how global actors behave, as well as the use of ethical frameworks as a way to appraise and critique global actors as they pursue their interests on the international scene.
