AHI 4930 / 5993: STUDIES IN AMERICAN ART
Tuesday and Thursday, 10:30 – 11:45 am

This course, conducted as a seminar with minimal lecturing, lots of discussion, and a focus on developing skills in writing and historical interpretation, will involve close study of a relatively small number of works of art produced in the North American colonies, later the United States, between roughly 1750 and 1900, accompanied by equally close scrutiny of relevant scholarly texts produced since the dawning of the new age of American art history around 1980.

Students will be responsible for class participation (without which no real learning will be possible) and a series of shorter papers culminating in a longer research project.
