Course Purpose:

The purpose of this course is to develop critical thinking skills that allow the successful analysis of situations in human relations that require appropriate leadership. By reviewing texts (literary and historical), case studies, and articles, students will gain an understanding of gender, cultural diversity, inclusion, personality, and group dynamics as applied to leadership and human relations.

Course Objectives:

The primary objective of this course is to equip the student with historical and theoretical perspectives of leadership styles.

The historical, fictional, and theoretical examples can then be used to analyze current managerial conditions and challenges, with a view toward developing one’s own management philosophy and leadership style.

This course will also provide the student with the opportunity to examine leadership “in extremis” — that is, in extreme conditions, when pushed to psychological, physical, and political limits. The student will have an opportunity to examine the decisions made and to subject them to a rigorous examination. Would you have made the same decision? Were the values sound or flawed? What are the ethical dilemmas?

Finally, the course looks at how one begins to form an approach for influencing one’s environment, and for analyzing how and why individuals make their choices. The focus is on effectiveness, and learning how to develop one’s strengths in order to achieve personal goals.

Assignments, Grading, and Due Dates:
Units: Unit Objectives, Online Readings, Assignments, Grading, and Due Dates. Visit http://www.beyondutopia.net/leadership for all links to online readings. Please visit Desire 2 Learn for articles and required work.

Unit 1

Unit 1 Overview:
In this unit, you will examine various management and leadership theories, with the goal of applying them to specific instances in your life, or to current events. The goal is to be able to compare approaches and philosophies, and be able to understand the costs and benefits of each. Required work: 1,200-word paper

Unit 1 Readings:
Procedure for online readings: Read quickly, for concepts rather than detail. Choose two or three to read more closely. Please think of ways that what is occurring in the text relates to a current contemporary situation, or a leadership/management issue that you have encountered or been aware of. Be sure to relate the reading to current historical & political issues as well.
- Machiavelli, N. The Prince and Selected Discourses.
- Daft, The Leadership Experience, Chapters 1-4
- Online Readings:
  - Anglo Saxon Poem “Battle of Maldon”
  - Elizabeth I, Speech to the troops at Tilbury
  - Henry V Speech, Battle of Agincourt Act III, Scene I
  - Beware the Hubris-Nemesis Complex: A Concept for Leadership Analysis by David Ronfeldt. This essay introduces and defines the concept of the hubris-nemesis complex, illustrates it by drawing upon both mythic characters and real personalities, relates it to other psychological phenomena that have been described well in the past, and discusses some challenges that may be faced in recognizing and dealing with the complex in the course of international relations. The essay argues that the complex is relatively common, but often unappreciated, and that we can see it at work in current-day figures such as Fidel Castro, Saddam Hussein, and Slobodan Milosevic—leaders about whom the United States has made serious misjudgements over the years. Thus, while the essay is intended to be conceptual and scholarly, it may have direct significance for understanding and dealing with foreign leaders in future crises and conflicts.

- Foucault’s Ideas about Crime, Society, Power, and Influence. Michel Foucault, the French philosopher, was one of the most influential thinkers of the 20th Century. Discipline and Punish, written in 1975, gave people a new way to view the prison system. In this book, Foucault describes the history of prisons. He explained why prisons continue to be popular even when they are not successful. Foucault believed prisons serve a greater purpose than just incarcerating criminals. He described how prisons really enslave everyone to a life of government-imposed discipline. Today, Foucault’s theories are still popular in all areas of academia.

- Check D2L and course website for additional online readings

Unit 1 Learning Objectives:

- Make connections between the ideas contained in Machiavelli’s The Prince and leadership situations in contemporary society, including the military
- Explain how a person’s core beliefs about the nature of humanity can influence one’s actions and attitudes with respect to leadership
- Categorize types of power in an organization, and make connections between power and leadership in organizations
- Describe how utopian ideas have influenced leadership decisions in the past, and how they may influence them now
- Explore the hubris-nemesis model of leadership
- Explain how followership relates to leadership, and how states of mind (including paranoia) influence the organization’s culture and the behavior of followers.

Unit 1 Guiding Questions

Please use these questions as springboards for fruitful contemplation, and to help you with your paper. You may respond to the questions if you wish. If you prefer to address other issues regarding the readings and leadership, please feel free to do so.

1. What are the attributes of a leader as illustrated by Machiavelli? Elizabeth I? Henry V? The soldiers at the Battle of Maldon?
2. In the various readings, which seems to be more important to the author: the state/organization, or the people who make it? Why does this perspective matter in leadership?
3. How does a person’s core belief about the nature of humanity influence how they lead? Does Machiavelli believe that people are inherently good or bad? What difference does this make in leadership decisions?
4. In the various readings, according to the author, which people in the organization benefit most? Why?
5. What is a leader’s role in a utopian experiment?
6. Can a corporation or a unit of the military ever have a kind of utopian vision? For example, in the case of special forces, or small units, what type of animating idea keeps the vision alive?
7. What does having a utopian vision mean for the leader? What are various implications?
8. Do followers ever force a vision upon a leader? In that case, are the followers, in fact, shaping the way the leader must behave?
9. Michel Foucault suggests a kind of control-based view of leadership and followership. He suggests that the followers’ belief that their actions— even thoughts and attitudes—are being monitored in order to punish deviation from the norm has a great impact on the organizational dynamics. How do fear and paranoia of the followers result in a reinforcing of power?

10. Anti-hero vs. Hero: What makes an anti-hero compelling? When is the anti-hero appeal most intense? What are the circumstances?

11. Can a charismatic leader even exist without devotees or followers?

12. Do leaders tend to exhibit the archetypal characteristics of a hero?

Unit 2

Unit 2 Overview

In this unit, you will closely examine a variety of leaders, with the goal of developing a personal vision of what defining traits or attributes make leaders who they are. Often they are hero figures. Often, they are anti-heroes. You will see examples of leaders who did not think of themselves as leading -- but, thanks to their followers, they were thrust into leadership positions. Leadership carries with it a number of rewards, but it also entails risk. Is it worth it? You decide… Required work: 1,200-word paper

Bodilly, Jennifer Sloan McCombs, Nate Orr, Ethan Scherer, Louay Constant, Daniel Gershwin. High-quality out-of-school-time (OST) programs have a positive effect on youth development, but many cities have found it difficult to address the challenges of expanding and improving the quality of programs offered to underserved and high-need students. In response, The Wallace Foundation sponsored an initiative to help five cities increase collaboration, access, quality, information sharing, and sustainability in their OST systems. The overall goals of the initiative were to increase access, improve quality, develop information systems for decision-making, and plan for financial stability.

- Charismatic Leadership: Pro's, Con's, References, Dark Side

- Extraordinary Governance and Non-Traditional Leadership. Over the course of the last two decades, three urban school districts—Chicago, Philadelphia, and New Orleans—have undertaken extraordinary systemic reform shaped by major changes to their governance structures and led by a non-traditional leader focused first on an operations-based strategy.

- What Is Your Leadership Script? The Script. “My life is a script” is a coined phrase used by one of my tech guys in regards to recent events with the software that I manage. This phrase stimulated my thinking in what is a life script and who is in charge of writing our scripts?

- Subordinate Perception of Leadership Style and Power: A Cross-Cultural Investigation (Master’s thesis — good review of concepts)

- Check D2L and course website for additional online readings

Unit 2 Learning Objectives:

- Develop and explain a strategy for leadership given cultural and gender expectations and differences;
- Explain the concept of charismatic leadership, its potentials and limits;
- Describe how the media packages a person to be considered a hero, a leader, or both;
- Explain the role of leadership to initiate and build strong communities.
- Detail the psychological and personality theories that could explain the behaviors of leaders such as Mother Jones, “mad messiahs,” dictatorships, self-sacrificing leaders and heroes.
- List attributes of effective leaders.

Unit 2 Guiding Questions

Select three or four and answer them in your paper:

1. What are some pressures you face as a leader that challenge your ability to do the right thing? Do you expect to face more or fewer pressures as a leader? Discuss what some of these pressures might be.
2. Discuss the role of a follower. Why do you think so little emphasis is given to followership compared to leadership in organizations?
3. Compare the alienated follower with the passive follower. Can you give an example of each? How would you respond to each if you were a leader?
4. Do you think self-management leadership should be considered a leadership style? Why or why not?
5. Describe the kinds of needs that people bring to an organization. How might a person's values and attitudes, as described in Chapter 4, influence the needs he or she brings to work?
6. What is the relationship among needs, rewards, and motivation?
7. If you were to communicate symbolically with your team to create a sense of trust and team work, what would you do?
8. Why might a person need to go through significant personal changes to be an effective team leader? What are some of the changes required?
9. Based on the readings, what do you see as characteristics or defining traits found in most leaders?
10. How do leaders "package" themselves so that they are immediately identified as leaders? Do you ever consciously do this? Do you think that packaging is unnecessary, and that the innate qualities of the leader will automatically communicate themselves to leaders (even if the individual has bad communication skills)? What are the ways of communicating? Words, appearance, gestures, tone of voice, actions, symbols & other accompanying signs and meaning-filled aspects?

11. How and where can a woman use a different approach to be effective, given that the people she needs to lead have specific ideas about gender roles?

12. How and why do leaders "script" themselves? In the case of "scripting" a "hyper macho male", what are the signs, symbols, and narrative elements (myth, archetype, personality theories) that are employed in order to achieve the desired effect?

13. Do leaders tend to exhibit the archetypal characteristics of a hero?

14. What is it about a hero that makes people want to follow?
   What does following entail?

15. Does the follower give up something, or does he/she in fact gain something in being a follower?

16. How does the media tend to depict a leader? How do you know that a person is a leader when you are watching a movie or television? What are they wearing? Where are they? What are they doing?

17. Anti-hero vs. Hero: What makes an anti-hero compelling? When is the anti-hero appeal most intense? What are the circumstances?

18. Can a charismatic leader even exist without devotees or followers?

Unit 3 Overview

Required work: 1,200-word paper

Unit 3 Readings

Procedure for reading — read quickly, for concepts rather than detail. Choose two or three to read more closely. Please think of ways that what is occurring in the text relates to a current contemporary situation, or a leadership / management issue that you have encountered or been aware of. Be sure to relate the reading to current historical & political issues as well!

- Daft, R. L., The Leadership Experience: Chapters 8 – 10
- Fox, W., Marine Rifleman
  - In Marine Rifleman: Forty-three Years in the Corps, Col. Wesley L. Fox, USMC (Ret.), former deputy commandant of cadets at Virginia Tech, tells his "life story as a Marine the way [he] remembers it." Retired from the Marine Corps in 1993, Fox is the quintessential soldier's soldier, having received the Medal of Honor, two awards of the Legion of Merit, a Bronze Star with Combat V, four Purple Hearts, and numerous commendations. Fox's memoir begins with his youth in rural Virginia as a ninth-grade dropout and teenage farmer who fulfilled his dream of serving his country by enlisting in the Marines in the early years of the Korean conflict. Subsequent chapters narrate Fox's steady rise through the ranks, and each concludes with a list of "lessons learned."

Dr. Nash's note: What I liked about this book is that it provides an evolutionary view of leadership, which begins with followership. It was interesting to me to read about Col. Fox's experiences as a 19-year-old in the Korean War (what a horrific experience, which personalizes the faceless statistics), and then in Vietnam, where guerrilla tactics and unethical fighting by the enemy were the norm. It was intriguing to see how his leadership vision evolved — I could see that it was built on practical experience and empathy. He does not base his leadership philosophy on a particular ideology or philosophical leaning. As a result, I found the later chapters to be a bit dull (I have no way of relating to them); but the day-to-day dehumanization and re-humanization of war was very touching. It made me realize that discipline and keeping a focus on the values that keep you human go a long way, even if they do seem untenable in certain situations (like combat).
I like to think of Marine Rifleman in terms of Richard Dawkins’ idea of memes. Memes are ideas or concepts that seem to replicate instantly through societal consciousness, and they create their own reality. Powerful memes are in collision course in our life and times — for example, the meme of victimization because of post-colonial globalization is one that is in direct conflict with the meme of global prosperity through technology. There are also meme-sources — the powerful characters, ideas, or concepts that find themselves in mirror images throughout our world — often propagated via the media. I see Col. Fox as a kind of meme-source of the quiet hero.

I also very much admire the values— and discipline-based approach which characterizes the military. Without it, there appear to be no limits to the depravity of the human being. A leader puts things into perspective and sets the tone for the entire organization. If they have a “by any means necessary” attitude, what are the implications? If the leader projects elitism, bullying, or cruel acts, what are the implications?

- Online Readings:
  - Imitative / Emulatory Behavior: Implications for Leadership. Herd Behavior and the Housing Collapse in Greece
  - Memes and Memetics. Introduction to Memetics (Richard Dawkins, “Chapter 11” from The Selfish Gene)
  - Brief History of Black Women in the Military. American women have participated in defense of this nation in both war and peacetime. Their contributions, however, have gone largely unrecognized and unrewarded. While women in the United States Armed Forces share a history of discrimination based on gender, black women have faced both race and gender discrimination. Initially barred from official military status, black women persistently pursued their right to serve.
  - Leadership Memes: Implementing the Idea of Memes in Leadership
  - The Social Psychology of Con Artists. What do con artists and leaders have in common? Discuss the ethical issues.
  - HOW TO CHEAT AT EVERYTHING. Over lunch with Simon Lovell, a fascinating former card shark, Allison Schrager learns all sorts of things about how swindlers operate. Thought: discuss core ethics and the parallels between con artists and other people in society.
  - Military Readiness: Women Are Not a Problem. Rand Reports.

Unit 3 Learning Objectives:
- Describe and explore the importance of values and vision in leadership;
- Explain how a leader’s vision connects with the values and beliefs of his or her context, society at large;
- Describe how women in the military have achieved leadership, and the challenges they have overcome;
- Apply the strategies used by women and military leaders to non-military situations;
- Write a description of how leaders and followers develop a shared vision and successful teamwork effort in difficult times (war, radical change and instability);
- Explain how labels and stereotyping damage a collective effort, and how a leader can either improve the situation, or create conditions that worsen it.
- Describe how a previously marginalized or exploited group can positively influence the majority.

Unit 3 Guiding Question:
1. You decide -- what are the implications of memes and leadership? Is Col Fox a "source-meme?" Yes? No? How? Connect to theories in Daft as well.
Unit 4:

Unit 4 Overview:

Required Work: Final Paper -- 1,500 words

Unit 4 Readings:

Daft, The Leadership Experience: Chapters 11 - 15

Final Project:

Please write a 1,500 word essay on an aspect of this course which you find important and/or provocative. Ideally, this essay will give you an opportunity to express your views, and describe how your perspectives and views have been expanded. Your essay can take many forms -- here are a few options:

1. The New Military: what will be the character and challenges of leaders in the years to come? How do some of the readings you have analyzed make you look at military leadership and leadership challenges from a new perspective? How will leaders productively guide the organization and its people through change? How will tradition be accommodated?

2. Memoir of Vision and Challenges. Write an autobiographical account of turning points, extreme situations, or other situations that changed your life, and gave you new insight into the human condition, and how that affects your ability to lead. Discuss your use of self-scripting.

3. Growing Up Very Quickly: How does one help develop leadership qualities in a young person who is facing often overwhelming challenges? Please be specific and use examples.

4. Memoir (can be real or invented, but in it you discuss leadership in day-to-day life. Be sure to use concrete examples, descriptions, etc.

5. A Bad Leader / Good Leader Checklist: Make a list and illustrate, either from the readings, or from other examples

6. “Dear Abby -- I know you’re on the other side, but HELP!!” Pretend to be the advice columnist, Abby, responding to letters asking her for advice about knotty workplace/life issues which deal with problematic leaders or managers. The managers addressed can be real -- for example, you might write a letter that begins this way: “Dear Abby, I need your help! Two years ago I joined a commune built on the values of Niccolo Machiavelli. Now I’m wondering if I did the right thing. I feel manipulated and frustrated”

7. Debate: write a script for a debate between two leaders (or individuals who represent a certain leadership philosophy) that you have studied in this class. For example, you may want to have a female military colonel debate Machiavelli over the role of women in the military. Or, you could have Col Fox debate Mother Jones about how to inspire loyalty in one’s followers.

8. Other ideas -- check with your professor.
Grading:
