The Arthur B. Adams Society

The Price College of Business at the University of Oklahoma now stands among the nation’s top business schools. We’re ready to continue the climb. We begin this climb knowing that the Purpose of Price is to ensure the enduring global competitiveness of Oklahoma and the nation by generating business insights on the greatest business issues of our time as we prepare future leaders to deploy and improve upon them. Private support is the key to providing the type of educational opportunities our talented students need and deserve to make a positive impact in such crucial areas as energy, the economy, education, healthcare and globalization. Whether it’s providing scholarships to help students pursue Study Abroad programs or working with students to secure internships and career opportunities, the support provided through the Adams Society makes a meaningful difference in the various student experiences offered by Price College.

Established in 2010, the Arthur B. Adams Society also serves as a valuable network of supporters who are greatly valued by the dean of Price College. Having such a loyal and supportive group of donors is considered a mark of an outstanding business school, and there has never been a more exciting time to contribute to our students’ successes.

In gratitude, Dean Daniel Pullin includes Adams Society members in special presidential and college events, regional receptions, communications and other activities of Price College. All Arthur B. Adams Society members may be included in the university-wide President’s Associates program for the duration of their financial commitment and are lifetime members of the Adams Society.

These are rapidly changing times in higher education, and this pace of innovation is best supported by the flexibility in funding that the Adams Society provides. As a primary vehicle for targeted investment, the Adams Society maximizes the college’s ability to generate business insights and prepare future leaders through transformational experiences in education.

Since joining the Adams Society a few years ago, Tamara and I have witnessed, first-hand, the impact of the society as our faculty, staff, alumni and supporters unite to prepare our students for future achievement. We greatly enjoy working with each society member to build on the current momentum and maximize the college’s impact as we move in a singular direction—forward.

“As a student, I was asked to present at Price College’s Adams Society Dinner. Hearing the members’ stories and getting to know them inspired me. I realized how incredibly blessed I was to be in a room full of such remarkable people.

Many people my age believe you must achieve a certain level of success or earn a specific amount of money before you can start giving back. I believe you must attain a certain attitude – that true success in life is measured by what you leave behind when you’re gone. You don’t have to give a lot for it to matter, you just have to give; the lives that are impacted by whatever contribution you make, whether sizable or not, defines your legacy.

My brother passed away a few years ago. I now honor his memory by helping someone else achieve their goals. I chose to give to Price College and join the Adams Society because my years there gave me so much. Being a part of the Price family of supporters means that I am counted among some of the people I admire most.”

“In 1961, I enrolled in the College of Business and during those years, I received a good foundation in the fundamentals of business and economics from excellent professors, including Dean Horace Brown. Later, after my military service, I earned my MBA from OU and always have valued the time spent in guiding my abilities to operate a business these 40+ years. It is most important that we appreciate the successful professional training we received and see it as a privilege to give back to the students of the future so they can enjoy the same quality education we did. The Adams Society has become a very respected vehicle for accomplishing this task.”
