

The Ph.D. program at the Gaylord College of Journalism and Mass Communication challenges students to conduct in-depth study of issues in news, strategic communication and media arts. The program offers a diverse faculty, outstanding facilities and nationally competitive funding.

The Gaylord College Ph.D. program seeks junior colleagues who wish to explore deeply the practices and values of journalism, mass communication and the media professions.

The program is highly competitive, admitting and funding just five students at $18,000 per year. We welcome applicants from across Oklahoma, the United States and the world – particularly those with three or more years of professional experience in journalism and mass communication disciplines. The application deadline for a fall start is Feb. 1.

Doctoral students will find a faculty with a wide range of research interests encompassing a variety of approaches and perspectives related to the program's three concentrations:

- News and Information
- Strategic Communication
- Media Arts

Among the areas of faculty expertise are management, ethics and normative theory, law, race and gender, international public relations, new media advertising, message strategy and tactics, and documentary.
