

Medical Humanities Scholars Program Course Plan

The Medical Humanities Scholars Program gives students with a variety of health-related interests the opportunity to achieve a high-level of competence in the cultural, ethical, psychological, and humanistic aspects of health and disease, while fulfilling their pre-medical requirements. Students should consult with the medical humanities director to outline a course of study that has a coherent focus: e.g., “art and anatomy during the Renaissance,” “cross-cultural perspectives on health and healing,” “medical ethics,” “the development of public health in America,” “medicine and religion.” Once agreeing upon a course of study, the student and the director of the medical humanities program should meet at course registration time each semester to chart the student’s progress and make any necessary adjustments to the course plan. PLEASE NOTE: This course plan does not include the basic pre-medical courses students are required to take in zoology, chemistry, physics, mathematics, and English. Those courses are still required for participation in this program.
