This chapter will trace the rise of Hu from his humble origins as a political

We've seen a well-deserved promotion at the Communist Youth League Position.

The experience and skills that Hu has gained at this position will also be put to the test as the newly elected leader of the Chinese Communist Party.

In the final section, we will discuss the implications of Hu's rise to power, both domestically and internationally.

The role of the Secretary: The policy of the Secretary is to ensure that the policies of the government are implemented effectively. The Secretary is responsible for the overall management of the government's policies and programs. The Secretary is also responsible for ensuring that the policies of the government are consistent with the government's overall objectives.

When a policy is being developed, the Secretary consults with other government officials to ensure that the policy is consistent with the overall objectives of the government. The Secretary also coordinates with other departments and agencies to ensure that the implementation of the policy is efficient and effective.

The Secretary is also responsible for ensuring that the policies of the government are communicated effectively to the public. This includes the development of communication materials and the coordination of media events to promote the government's policies.

In addition, the Secretary is responsible for ensuring that the policies of the government are evaluated on a regular basis to ensure that they are effective and achieving the desired outcomes. This includes the development of evaluation frameworks and the coordination of evaluation activities to assess the impact of the policies of the government.

pick up the pace and became widespread. As the years went by, increasing numbers of people who worked in the public sector began to see the benefits of a defined benefit plan. These plans promised a certain level of retirement income, which was calculated based on factors like years of service and average salary. The idea was to provide a secure source of income after a career of hard work. However, the implementation of such plans was not without its challenges.

One of the central concerns when it comes to pension planning is the risk of inflation. Inflation can erode the purchasing power of retirement savings, meaning that a retiree's income streams may not stretch as far in real terms as they did earlier. To mitigate this risk, many pension plans offer inflation protection, which helps to maintain the real value of the retiree's income over time.

Another key consideration is the investment of retirement savings. While pension plans often have a diversified investment strategy built around the needs of the retiree, individual investors may prefer to take more active control of their retirement fund, choosing investments they believe will offer the best long-term returns.

Balance is crucial in pension planning. A well-rounded approach that takes into account both financial needs and personal preferences can lead to a more secure retirement.

carries substantial diplomatic functions. It was not until late 2001, when Hu visited Russia, Britain, France, Germany, and Spain, that the supposed "crown prince" to the CCP throne was allowed to engage in big-time diplomacy. Some analysts also believed that Jiang had veered an early visit by Hu to the United States despite Washington's anxiety to schedule a trip for the up-and-coming leader. And while Hu was named first vice-chairman of the CMC in 1999, he was kept out of the loop so far as important decision-making in defense matters was concerned. Moreover, Jiang and his cronies also decided to deny Hu the designation of "core" of the Fourth-Generation leadership. This was despite the great satisfaction with which the ex-president enjoyed flaunting his status as "Third-Generation core"; this would make Jiang the equal of Mao and Deng, the "core" of the First- and Second-Generation leadership respectively. In fact, Jiang had since the late 1990s asked the media not to use the term Fourth-Generation leadership or to identify Hu as its head.

Messy Infighting in the Run-up to the Sixteenth CCP Congress

Unlike the days of Mao and Deng, ideology was much weakened under Jiang Zemin. Most of the factions and power blocs within the CCP were defined not so much by distinctive ideological characteristics as by narrow self-interests. In terms of political or economic philosophies, there was not much difference between cliques such as those led by Jiang and Hu. CCP factions are thus rightly seen as interest groupings. For example, the Shanghai Faction looks after the well-being and prospects—power and status, financial resources, and business interests—of the Greater Shanghai Region (including Jiangsu and Zhejiang provinces and the lower reaches of the Yangtze River) as well as those of cadres affiliated with the rich metropolis.

Owing to the fact that the Sixteenth CCP Congress would pave the way for the rise of a new generation—and a major redistribution of powers and perks—intecneic bickering and back stabbing among the factions went on right until the eve of the watershed event. Thus, while Third-Generation stalwarts such as Jiang and then Parliament chief Li Peng were past retirement age, they schemed and conspired to hang onto at least one significant party or state post. And cadres who were determined to step down, such as then premier Zhu, did their best to ensure the promotion of their protégés.

Despite the rising momentum of Hu's CYL Faction as well as State Council bureaucrats headed by then premier Zhu and then vice-premier Wen, the Shanghai Faction was able to pull off a series of coups in the run-up to and at the Sixteenth Congress. First, Jiang and Zeng managed to ram through the expansion of the Politburo Standing Committee from seven to nine members. Until mid-2002, the consensus in the incumbent or Fifteenth PSC was that there would be seven PSC members, namely Hu Jintao, Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) chairman Li Ruihuan, vice-premier Wu Bangguo, vice-premier Wen Jiabao, CCP Secretariat member Zeng Qinghong, law and order specialist Luo Gan, and Guangdong party chief Li Changchun. And the major posts of party boss; chairman of the National People's Congress (NPC) or parliament; premier; CPPCC chairman; and head of the Central Commission for Disciplinary Inspection (CCDI) would go to respectively Hu, Li Ruihuan, Wen, Wu, and Luo. Just a few months before the Congress was to convene, however, Jiang maneuvered to have two cronies—Shanghai party chief Huang Ju and Beijing party boss Jia Qinglin—inducted into the PSC. This was despite the fact that except during brief periods in the Cultural Revolution, the CCP PSC usually consists of merely five to seven members so as to facilitate decision making. The inclusion of Huang and Jia—both of whom were haunted by innuendo about incompetence and corruption—however, would ensure that the nine-member PSC would have at least four dyed-in-the-wool Jiang supporters: Zeng, Wu, Huang, and Jia. Until this startling development, the expectation in political circles in Beijing was that both Huang and Jia would head off to ceremonial posts as vice-chairmen of the NPC or the CPPCC. Equally significantly, the ex-president resorted to draconian means to force former Tianjin mayor Li Ruihuan to retire from the Politburo. This was despite the fact that Li, being sixty-eight at the time, was two years shy of the generally recognized retirement age for a Politburo member. Many analysts believe that Jiang had subtly threatened to expose "black material" that would harm the reputation of the flamboyant and popular CPPCC chairman. Jiang's logic was that given Li's seniority and his perceived closeness to the CYL faction, allowing him to stay on in the PSC would tip the balance of power in favor of Hu. Yet the biggest surprise was that the seventy-six-year-old Jiang pragmatically knew that other non-Shanghai Faction politicians was his hanging on to the post of PSC chairman. This was the wily Shanghai Faction chief's way of saying that he was the equal of Deng, who also retained the post of commander-in-chief after his retirement from all party and state positions in the early 1980s. However, for reasons including his age—and the fact that he had made unofficial promises to party elders such as Qiao Shi to retire in totality—Jiang's bending of the rules proved extremely unpopular with Congress delegates as well as the majority of cadres. Yet another crucial element of Jiang-Zeng's scheme to maintain control were the frantic changes of civilian and military personnel in the year before the Sixteenth Congress. From late 2001 onward, the bulk of the party secretaries and governors of the 31 provinces and directly administered cities were reshuffled. Likewise, around 200 mid- to senior-ranked PLA posts at both headquarters units and the regional commands changed hands. Not surprisingly, the Jiang or Shanghai Faction was the major beneficiary of the personnel movement. "Zeng has been accused by cadres outside the Shanghai Faction of using regional reshuffles to boost the Shanghai Faction's share of Central Committee—and Politburo—seats," said a veteran party cadre. It is noteworthy that in 1992 and 1997, when respectively the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Party Congresses were held, large-scale regional reshuffles were not undertaken before the major conclaves. Such changes only took place in the six months or so after the congresses.

2003. More significantly, the rise of China would make possible the prospects in 2023. When China is a more vibrant candidate to succeed Japan, to succeed in the machinery of the global economy, it is likely to be the Chinese government that could make those prospects a reality.

To understand the Chinese government's outlook on the world order, we need to consider the role of China's leaders, particularly the leadership of Xi Jinping. Xi Jinping has been at the forefront of China's diplomatic and economic strategies, advocating for a more open and inclusive global order. His leadership has been characterized by a strong emphasis on the rule of law, economic development, and international cooperation.

China's rise as a global power has been accompanied by a series of外交 initiatives aimed at advancing its influence and expanding its global reach. One of the most significant of these initiatives is the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), which seeks to promote economic cooperation and connectivity across the Asia-Pacific region and beyond. The BRI is a testament to China's commitment to fostering a more integrated and interconnected world, aligning with the principles of globalization.

The Chinese leadership also places a high value on cultural exchange and soft power, recognizing the importance of diplomacy beyond traditional economic and political means. China's engagement with the United Nations, for instance, has been marked by its efforts to support international cooperation on a range of issues, from climate change to global health, demonstrating a commitment to global governance and mutual respect.

In conclusion, China's role in the global order is defined by its ambition to be a leading voice in shaping the future of the world, through its policies that promote economic growth, cultural exchange, and international cooperation. As China continues to assert its influence, it will be crucial to understand the dynamics at play and the implications for global stability and prosperity.
However, this is a critical point when we consider the existing CCP structure. In June 2019, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China issued a document entitled "The Implementation of the CCP's Strategic Planning and Other Key Tasks." The document outlined the strategic planning agenda for the next few years, emphasizing the importance of maintaining economic stability and social harmony.

At the heart of this agenda was the need to strengthen the CCP's leadership role in all aspects of society. This included promoting the development of civil society organizations, ensuring their adherence to the principles of the Communist Party, and fostering a culture of patriotism and discipline.

The document also highlighted the importance of reforms in the economic, social, and cultural sectors. It called for a greater emphasis on innovation and the development of high-tech industries, as well as the improvement of living standards for the urban and rural populations.

Furthermore, the document reiterated the commitment to upholding the principles of socialism with Chinese characteristics, and to fostering a sense of national identity and unity among the Chinese people.

In conclusion, the CCP's strategic planning represents a comprehensive approach to addressing the challenges facing China in the 21st century. It seeks to balance economic development with social stability, while also promoting cultural exchange and international cooperation.

The CCP's strategic planning is a reflection of its vision for a prosperous, harmonious, and innovative society. It is an indication of the Party's determination to lead the country towards a brighter future, while maintaining its core principles and values.
The rise of HIV/AIDS

From the late 1970s to the mid-1990s, the AIDS epidemic spread rapidly in the United States, and around the world. The epidemic was first identified in the United States in 1981, and by 1985, it had spread to more than 100 countries. The virus that causes AIDS, HIV, was first isolated in 1983, and by 1987, the first effective treatments for HIV were developed. However, the global response to the epidemic was slow, and by the late 1990s, it was estimated that more than 30 million people had died from AIDS. The United Nations have made significant progress in the fight against AIDS, and by 2012, the number of new HIV infections had been reduced by more than 60% compared to 2000. However, the global community still faces significant challenges in the fight against AIDS, and continued efforts are needed to ensure that everyone who needs treatment can access it.
