Yeah, it seems like I’m the perpetual student. I’ve been trying to get an advanced degree for years. I wasn’t into getting the “online college” degree. I wanted to get a degree from an accredited university that I could go touch someday if I wanted to, and had a reputation for education excellence. And it’s the University of Oklahoma. What better university is there?

I’d say that as a military member, OU Outreach was a real draw, of course, because of the affordability and the research I’ve done. It really is hard to beat, and having that flexibility where, if I am deployed, I can still take a few online courses or independent study. At the same time, having that brick-and-mortar kind of education where I’m actually in class, face to face with a professor, means a lot to me.

Being able to get this graduate degree, it would have to be a program like this, because a single mom is time management, so time is very precious. And they give you plenty of time to read up on the textbooks, write your paper, do your research, and other universities would charge double or triple what OU charges. And it’s important. It makes you a better person, too, to learn and never stop learning.

In today’s economy and how competitive it is, you need every edge you can to get ahead. And I think a degree is just one of those things on the list, and so it was really helpful to find a format where I could travel and keep working full time and keep progressing my career, while at the same time obtain that degree that people respect and is from a known brick-and-mortar institution. And I’m developing all these skills and learning all these things I didn’t know that I could do.
