Brazil in Transition
Colonialism in the Modern World
Contemporary Europe European countries are changing. Immigration and migration have changed the complexities of European societies. The expansion of the European Union has changed the way European governments handle public policy challenges. Over the last twenty years, the boundaries of democratic Europe have moved steadily east. The purpose of this class is to assess these changes, examining how they have altered European cultures, economies, polities and societies. We will focus on a few specific themes, such as the multi-cultural challenges of European immigration, how migration among European countries fosters a common European identity, how economic integration has created a common marketplace of goods, services and ideas, and what has happened to the Transatlantic relationship between Europe and the US.

Iran Since 1979 Revolution This course is designed as an examination of Iranian politics and society since the 1979 revolution. It will endeavor to provide an organized framework for understanding key themes in the making of Iran’s “Islamic Republic”. These factors will include an examination of the revolutionary upheaval of 1978-79, the ideological character of the Islamic revolution, the eight years of war with Iraq, economic and social changes, the rise and fall of the reform movement of Muhammad Khatami, the emergence of Iranian neoconservatives under Mahmud Ahmadinejad, recent cultural, intellectual, and artistic developments, the Green Movement and the disputed presidential election of 2009, and contemporary prospects for Iranian democracy. The course will be organized in broadly chronological terms in four parts (ideology and structure, foreign policy, social and cultural change, and the green movement); however, much of the reading and discussion material will overlap thematically. While there is no prerequisite for the course, students are advised that this course is not intended as an introduction to Iranian or Middle Eastern history or politics, and some previous Middle Eastern Studies coursework is recommended.

Iraq and Weapons of Mass Destruction
Latin American Narco-Regimes This course focuses on the ongoing armed conflicts between narcotraffickers, cartels, and rebels and the governments of Brazil, Mexico, and Colombia. Placing each case study in historical and cultural perspective, students will develop an understanding of the organization and activities of narco-regimes in the region, the conditions that gave rise to their florescence, and the nature of state response to the threats in security and sovereignty they pose.

Modern Brazil This course introduces students to contemporary Brazilian history and culture. Grounding our study with a broad overview of Brazil’s colonial history and emergence as a modern nation, we will explore the country’s incredible cultural and regional diversity, as well as discuss some of the challenges it currently faces. Course material will include exploration of indigenous realities, the rural landless movement, poverty and crime, gender, family, race, contemporary religion, and popular culture--samba, carnival, hip-hop and Brazilian funk music. In our exploration of Brazil, we will engage with a number of different types of sources and materials: primary historical documents, films, music, fiction, and ethnography.

Modern Iran

Nationalism and the Modern Middle East This course will survey the history of the Middle East from 1800 to the present with an emphasis on the emergence of the nationalism as a new form of political identity in the region. During these two centuries, forms of national identity (ethnic, linguistic, racial, sectarian, secessionist, and confessional identities) have become one of the main sources of political contestation in the region. This form of politics has become so commonplace during this period that the history of the region during the past two centuries can rightly be described as “the age of nationalism”. The course will analyze the origins of this form of politics in the region as a result of transformations rooted in the nineteenth century, analyze its rise to dominance as a form of politics and ideology during the twentieth century, as well as survey countervailing trends that today challenge its continued dominance.

National Security Policy  National Security Policy is a course designed to focus the student both on the policy process and its substance. To that end, we will look at how the national security policymaking process developed from the National Security Act of 1947 through the Goldwater-Nichols DOD Reorganization Act of 1986 to the present. This will entail a thorough examination of the US interagency process both in theory and how it works in practice. In terms of substance, we will consider the products beginning with NSC 68 and continuing up to the current National Security Strategy of the United States. We will also examine a series of case studies beginning with the 1989 invasion of Panama up to and including the current conflict in Iraq. As a counterpoint to the major cases we will consider the variety of "low intensity" national security conflicts that have involved the US since the end of World War II.

Women & Gender in South Asia From the beginning of British colonialism through the present, women and women’s rights have been used as proxies for the society’s status as modern and progressive. This course considers the way women and gender have been thought from the 19th century articulation of “The Women’s Question” and Women’s Reform to the present day rethinking of state based rights strategies and normative gender constructions in the Indian Subcontinent. The class will use scholarly articles, primary sources, fiction, and film to interrogate questions about women’s place in society, women and the state, gendering work, and women’s lives in South Asia.
