An introduction to the study of science, technology, and medicine in cultural context, this course explores the historical background for some of the most important issues of the 21st Century, from climate change to new media to biotechnology. It is designed to be an interdisciplinary meeting ground, where students from the humanities, social sciences, and science/engineering all can learn new perspectives on science, nature, and society. Course materials include films and novels as well as nonfiction.

MW: 1:30-2:45 PM
PHSC 224
Email: HHeyck@ou.edu