Student Spotlight:

Meet Christian Glocke!

Christian Glocke is a senior pursuing two degrees: in human relations and criminal justice. He can be best described as mysterious, introverted, and observant.

He enjoys keeping up with world events that have a direct impact on the future of humanity.

In his career, Glocke would like to make a difference through humanitarian efforts. He is thinking about state and federal jobs to create social change or aid in humanitarian efforts.

"It is normal to experience rough patches throughout our adult experience but not at the cost of impressing other people."
- Christian Glocke

Glocke has been working hard to finish his programs. He was recently on the Dean and President honor rolls and successfully completed two consecutive semesters, taking over 20 hours each term.

He shares that despite the rough start to his academic journey, he has reshaped himself to follow his academic pursuits to achieve a greater understanding of his place in life. This took a great amount of sacrifice and required him to take the time to develop self-insight about the decisions he was making. He believes that everyone struggles but thinks that it is important to reach out whenever you feel like a great weight has been placed on your shoulders.

This is a monthly recognition of hardworking and dedicated students of the program. Nominate yourself or a friend!

Faculty Spotlight:

Meet Marilyn Byrd, Ph.D.!

The Academy of Human Resource Development has named one of its annual awards in honor of Marilyn Byrd, Ph.D. The award, The Marilyn Y. Byrd Excellence in HRD Research-to-Practice Award, will be presented annually and will recognize publications in Advances in Developing Human Resources, which make significant contributions to human resource development theory and practice.

Byrd is the first sitting editor-in-chief to receive this honor in the 25+ years of AHRD's history. She is also the first Black American editor-in-chief of any of AHRD's four journals. In 2019, Byrd received the Critical HRD Scholar Award honoring a scholar whose research actively challenges normative views while advancing important critical perspectives and principles. She recently led Advances in Developing Human Resources through a major structural change that made significant improvements to the journal's submission process and system. Her vision is to move Advances into a competitive market as a leader in the research and practice of human resource development.

Marilyn Byrd is an associate professor with the Human Relations Department. She teaches Human Resources courses in the graduate program and advises the Student Society for Human Relations.
