SARAH GUTHERY, Ph.D.

Associate Professor, Educational Administration,
Curriculum and Supervision Director, Institute for the Study of Education Finance (ISEF)

Research Interests

As a former teacher with a background in economics, issues impacting the educator labor market are at the core of her research agenda. Current work examines the influence of educational policy on the production, retention and promotion of educators, and the systematic inequalities educators face at each of those phases due to their race and gender. Additionally, she oversees research examining how efficiently the state spends its limited resources on K12 education, and how equitably those resources are distributed.

Current Projects

- Examining the role of women in Oklahoma educational leadership
- The role of licensure in teaching when alternative and emergency paths are so prevalent.

What They Find Exciting

- Sharing her love of statistics with students through gamification.
- Working with aspiring school leaders to discover their passion in research.
